This involved, for example, making the paths narrower across the almost 500-square-metre space, which is now framed by mirrored linden groves. New flower beds featuring steel strips made by Richard Brink were installed across a section of the garden measuring approx. 250 square metres.

The metal products manufacturer from Eastern Westphalia supplied around 200m of both straight and custom pre-curved steel-strip edgings and the respective connectors made of hot-dip galvanised steel. The edgings are 150mm high and 6mm thick.

What's more, the typical parterre planting and the broad view from the garden has opened up a line of sight between the park and the surrounding Harz panorama.
